Message

The lack of availability of gender disaggregated data across different levels is a challenge. Further, the data available on various socio-economic and political indicators is fragmented and not easily available. Thus any effort to bring together such data is a meaningful exercise. Use of maps based on such data makes the information more easily comprehensive through a high visual content and a spatial perspective.

I am pleased that the National Resource Centre for Women set up under the Scheme of National Mission for Empowerment of Women has collaborated with Department of Geography, Kirorimal College, University of Delhi to bring out a unique and informative document which depicts many critical indicators related to various aspects of women across the country.

I sincerely hope that this 'Gender Atlas' serves as useful reference material for different stakeholders within the government, academicians, students and other experts especially working on gender issues.

I also hope that such information gets updated from time to time in order to remain contemporary and continue to serve as useful reference material.
